These superior agapanthus were bred by Andy de Wet and Quinton Bean of De Wet Plant Breeders for the world wide ornamental plant market. Many have won several prestigious international awards including Agapanthus Blackjack's "Best new plant of 2023" at the Chelsea International Flower Show in the UK.

The purpose of this publication is to present landscape architects, landscape contractors and the avid gardener with information about all our new and existing commercially available indigenous agapanthus varieties.

Agapanthus are extremely well suited for gardening as they are exceptionally tolerant towards heat and drought. They are easy to grow, evergreen and still perform well even when neglected.

Agapanthus are heavy feeders and do best when planted in rich loose soil preferably with some bonemeal. They should be fed at least twice annually with 3.1.5 organic fertilizer.
